The General Frisbie was a swift, wooden, screw steamer, plying between San Francisco and Vallejo on San Pablo bay. On her return trip, late yesterday, she carried 300 pasngers, among them 45 orphans, who had made an excursion to witness the ceremonies of the Good Templars' Orphans' Home at Vallejo. Crashes on Submerged Rock.

To give the passengers a better sight of the beautiful exposition facade, the captain steered inshore, close to the seawall. The vessel was skimming along at full speed, when she brought up with a crash on the rock and stopped dead.

Women and children were thrown screaming with fright to the decks in huddled heaps. Ine ship took a bad list and began to fill rapidly. As the throngs of promenaders on the marina realized that a tragedy might be enacted before their eyes and find themselves powerless to be of aid, they began to run simlessly back and forth, women wringing their hands and crying "Oh! can't something be done!"
